Dorothea von Hantelmann How to Do Things with Art

The Societal Efficacy of Art

At the heart of How to Do Things with Art lies the question of art's relevance to society. How does art become politically or socially significant and what preconditions must be fulfilled in order to enable art-works to attain such significance? This book attempts to answer these questions on a theoretical level, and to indicate, via a number of contemporary artworks, how artists can create and shape social relevance. In other words, it attempts to provide what could be called a pragmatic understanding of art's societal impact.

societal impact.
The question of bour to do things with art seems particularly pertinent today both from a societal and an artistic perspective. Never before has what we call art been so important to Western societies: more art museums are being built than ever before, art exhibitions attract a mass audience, the art world has not only expanded globally but also socially—up to the point where a London journalist calls art

Dorothea von Hantelmann

How to Do Things with Art

Program
Documents Series

Edited by Karen Marta

Authors Hans Ulrich Obrist Dorothea von Hantelmann

Edition
English
January 2017
ISBN: 978-3-03764-104-0
Softcover, 150 x 210 mm
206 pages
Images 19 b/w
CHF 25 / EUR 20 / £ 15 / US 29.95

The societal efficacy of art

At the heart of "How to Do Things with Art" lies the question of art's relevance to society. How does art become politically or socially significant? This book attempts to answer this question on a theoretical level, and to indicate, through the analysis of works by James Coleman, Daniel Buren, Jeff Koons, and Tino Sehgal, how artists can create and shape social relevance; in other words, to provide what could be called a pragmatic understanding of art's societal impact. The title of the book itself is a play on John Langshaw Austin's seminal lecture series "How to Do Things with Words," in which he discussed the performative, or reality-producing, capacity of language.

If Dorothea von Hantelmann's line of argument is based on the two theoretical premises of Austin's and Judith Butler's notion of performativity, this book offers a real semantic of how an artwork, not in spite of, but rather by virtue of its integration in certain conventions, "acts": how, for example, via the museum it sustains or co-produces a certain notion of history, progress, and development. The model of performativity that the author argues for, points toward these fundamental levels of meaning production, putting the conventions of art production, presentation, and historical persistence into focus, showing how these conventions are co-produced by any artwork, and proposing that it is precisely this dependency on conventions that opens up the possibility of changing them.

The question of how to do things with art seems particularly pertinent today: never before has what we call art been so important to Western societies—more art museums are being built than ever before, exhibitions attract mass audiences, the art world has not only expanded globally but also socially, and probably no other profession has received such a dramatic boost in status as the artist, who perfectly embodies today's prevailing idea of a creative, self-determined subjectivity.

The book is part of the Documents series, co-published with Les presses du réel and dedicated to critical writings.

Third printing.

Also available as e-book:

ISBN: 978-3-03764-369-3 (i-tunes, Barnes & Nobles, and Kobo)

ISBN: 978-3-03764-370-9 (Kindle)